In the beginning, Kenneth Cole planned to borrow a truck and park it in midtown Manhattan, but this required a permit granted only to utility companies or movie productions. So he changed the company name to Kenneth Cole Productions Inc. (telling the mayor that he was making a movie), painted the name on the truck and sold 40,000 pairs of shoes in two and a half days. Today the company sells much more than shoes, including watches. There are several different models, but most of them use the same technique for setting the time. Pull the large pin located in the middle right-hand side (if you're looking at the face) of the watch frame. Turn the knob to move the mechanical hands on the clock face. Press the pin back into the side of the watch frame when the time is set. Make sure the second hand is moving. Pull the pin out two places (you should feel two clicks) to set the date. Check to make sure that when you're setting the time, you haven't pulled it out too far. Turn the knob in the "date position" to set the proper date. Repeat Steps 1 through 3 with the smaller pins on each side of the main pin to set the stopwatch or alternate time zone clocks (if you own a Kenneth Cole watch with these options). Press the lower left button on the Kenneth Cole digital watches to cycle through the various modes. Press it three times to get into time mode (the face should be blinking). Press the upper right-hand button to change the seconds. Press the lower right-hand button to select the minutes. Press the upper right-hand button again to set the minutes. Press the lower right-hand button once more to get to hours, and then use the upper right-hand button to change them. Activate and hold the button to confirm that you're human. Thank You! Try a different method The traditional runway shows of events like Paris Fashion Week are global media spectacles. Photos and video taken during those days disseminate, not just to trade press, but to magazines and TV shows. And at the end of the day, consumers get a peek into the world of high fashion. But the very model of the runway show isn't really structured for the global audience. It takes place in a single room-even if it's a big room-and no print or video medium does much justice to its intent, to capture how this clothing actually looks on someone. "Runway shows are an amazing experience, but I feel like they're a bit removed from the consumer," Chief Marketing Officer Amy Choyné tells Co.Design. "We wanted to do something innovative, that would not only speak to the press, but we are going to be using all this creative model interaction in our stores and online to continue the conversation." So for Kenneth Cole's Fall Collection, they did something different-what they call a digital flip book. They used eight slightly-larger-than-life video installations of interactive models wearing the new line of clothing. The model would stand there, twirling their hair or looking around impatiently. When someone walked up, the video would "turn on," the model would respond and share one of 24 looks from the collection. On its own, the idea is a bit of a gimmick-and just like a runway show, this occurred at a press event that was clearly catering to the press. But what's neat about this idea of interactive digital models is that it can democratize the high fashion experience. While few labels could afford to employ runway models 24/7 in their stores, Kenneth Cole plans to bring these video installations to their flagships (and maybe even include elements online), meaning that the average shopper can get the same taste of their new line as some of the most privileged members of the press. The only challenge now is, how do you scale custom video installations to the local store level? "We're going through the logistics right now to see what video installation works in each individual space," says Choyné, "but it's safe to say it'll be a more heightened experience than a television screen." Even still, I can't help but wonder if even Kenneth Cole realizes how large this simple idea could become. Traditionally, the fashion industry has digitized models in a manner that has mostly created blowback-software-skinnying already thin bodies to fulfill some hyperreality in which even poor Barbie needs to purge. But through full-motion video, with a component of real human interaction, the industry can create a larger than life experience that feels remarkably human, an individualized experience that can scale to almost any digital platform. Because, after all, who amongst us can say they never wanted the chance to meet a supermodel?[Hat tip: psf] With a Casio watch on your wrist, you'll be ready to take on your day and get things done on time. Setting the time on a Casio watch is a straightforward process, outlined in the various user manuals for the different watch models. How Do I Set My Casio Watch? On some Casio watches, you'll see two buttons on the left side of the watch face and two buttons on the right side of the watch face. The lower button is the button to enter timesetting mode. Hold the lower right button for two seconds, and then press the lower left button until the seconds start flashing. Press the center button to reset the seconds. Press the lower left button again to show the screen for setting the date and time. Press this button again to move through setting the hour, minute, year, month and day. Use the upper right button or the center button to adjust each setting. And then you finish, press the lower right button again to exit the timesetting mode. The Casio Illuminator On the Casio Illuminator, press the lower button on the left edge of the watch face so the seconds begin flashing. Press the button on the lower right edge of the watch face to proceed to setting the hour, minutes, month, date and day of the week. While each setting flashes on the watch face, that setting is selected. You can change it by pressing the upper button on the left edge of the watch. Proceed through each setting. When you finish, press the lower left button again to switch to timekeeping mode. Casio Watch User Manuals Casio makes watch user manuals available for consumers. Visit the "manuals" section of the Casio website and choose either "timepieces" or "smart outdoor watches" to navigate to a listing of the manuals available for download. Enter the model number in the search field and click "search" to navigate to the downloadable user manual. Contact Casio Casio's customer service can help you get answers to questions about your watch, too. From the Casio homepage, scroll to the bottom of the page to find the "Contact Us" link. Click the link and peruse the options, including getting support for repair and parts or technical support for using a Casio product. You can also call or email Casio directly to get answers to questions or help with concerns. Frequently Asked Questions Casio offers answers to frequently asked questions on the website to assist consumers. For example, if you want to know how to adjust your Casio watch for daylight saving time, the FAQ page can help you. You can learn how to turn your watch's DST setting to the "on" position in the timekeeping mode. Once you turn this setting on, the watch can automatically spring forward or fall back when necessary. Before contacting the company directly, consider seeing if your answer is on this page. MORE FROM QUESTIONS ANSWERED.NET
